

NHS England launch consultation into congenital heart disease services

Today NHS England has launched their consultation on proposals for Congenital Heart Disease services.

In July 2016, NHS England published a set of proposals regarding the future commissioning of congenital heart disease (CHD) services for children and adults.

The aim of this public consultation is to provide patients and their families with information about the proposals and the potential impact they may have, if implemented, on the delivery of services – and to seek patient/carer views about the plans.

All details, proposals and lists of events and activities (both digital and face to face) can be found here:

Please note, a special consultation event will take place at the Evelina London Children's Hospital on 28th March 2017 – echo will publish further info about this next week.
